Dear Staff,

“Have courage” is often said lightly. “Have courage” may even sound almost cynical to some caregivers—given shrinking financial and personnel resources and increasing bureaucratic demands. In such circumstances, it is understandable if courage begins to fade.

“Have courage” is not something that can simply be wished upon someone; courage must be discovered. And there are many courageous people in nursing who stand firm despite time pressure and lack of appreciation, who see in those they care for not merely clients, but human beings.

To care for people with dignity requires many small and large decisions every single day—for myself and for those entrusted to me. Every day, choices must be weighed and made. We are convinced that God gives us strength and guidance in this. This enables us to find courage for all our tasks and decisions. In this spirit, we wish you courageous days in nursing.

In this spirit, we wish you courageous days in nursing.
